

Protect Young People, Make the Tobacco Industry Pay

International Youth Day 2026 open letter to governments

12 August 2026

To: Dr. Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus, Director-General, World Health Organization; Andrew Black, Acting Head, WHO Framework Convention on Tobacco Control Secretariat; Amb. Andranik Hovhannisyanyan, Chair, United Nations Commission on Narcotic Drugs; António Guterres, Secretary-General, United Nations; Inger Andersen, Executive Director, United Nations Environment Programme; Catherine Russell, Executive Director, United Nations Children's Fund; and Heads of State and Government

Dear leaders and decision-makers,

On International Youth Day, we write as Global Youth Voices, a movement of youth organizations and coalitions spanning more than 135 countries with an important message that affects our generation. We are being aggressively targeted by a big, powerful and harmful industry – the tobacco industry - that continually reinvents how addiction is designed, promoted, and normalized. We are also the generation that will live longest with the health, environmental, economic, and human rights consequences of the decisions you make now.

The tobacco and nicotine industry's tactics evolve faster than policies that control them. Flavors, sleek devices, influencer content, sports and entertainment sponsorships, digital promotion, and carefully branded “sustainability” initiatives all serve the same business objective: recruit and addict new consumers.

This year brings a clear test of public leadership. A global scientific assessment of nicotine has been triggered at the World Health Organization (WHO), while governments begin carrying out recent WHO Framework Convention on Tobacco Control (FCTC) decisions on liability, environmental harm and forward-looking tobacco control. These processes have different mandates, but they face the same question: will public institutions protect young people faster than the industry can adapt?

The industry is recruiting its next generation of customers. Governments must protect the current generation and ensure the future generation is free from addiction. We therefore call on every institution, within its mandate, to act on four priorities:

- Stop the pipeline to addiction. Ban novel recreational addictive tobacco and nicotine products. Where bans have not been adopted, apply and enforce the strongest possible restrictions, including bans on flavors, youth-oriented design, access and all advertising, promotion and sponsorship across digital media, influencers, sports, entertainment and emerging technology environments.

- Make the industry pay. Put liability and the polluter-pays principle into practice through levies, fees, penalties, compensation and remediation for health, environmental and economic harms. Do not reward the industry with influence or legitimacy through corporate social responsibility, recycling or extended producer responsibility schemes.
- Protect policy from tobacco industry interference. Apply WHO FCTC Article 5.3, disclose interactions and limit them to those strictly necessary, manage conflicts of interest and reject industry funding. Establish formal, adequately supported ways for independent young people to shape, monitor and evaluate the policies that determine our future.
- Keep nicotine science independent. Ensure the WHO review is rigorous, transparent and free from tobacco and nicotine industry influence, including influence exercised through funded researchers, front groups or other proxies. It must fully examine dependence, youth impacts, product design and population-level consequences.

By the end of 2026, we ask governments and international institutions to publish the concrete steps they will take on these priorities and explain how independent youth voices will help shape and monitor them. We will measure commitment by outcomes, not invitations, slogans or voluntary promises.

The choice is clear: burden young people and make us pay with our health and future, or make the tobacco industry pay for the harm it causes us. Choose accountability. Choose our future.

About the Global Youth Voices

*This letter was coordinated by the Global Youth Voices (GYV). GYV is a movement that represents over 70 youth organizations and coalitions covering 135 countries across the globe that seeks to make the tobacco industry pay for the harms caused to the planet and its people, not only for those in this generation, but also future generations. In May 2024, GYV adopted the GYV Declaration, which sets out its common demands on tobacco industry interference, addictive products, environmental harm and accountability. Youth concerns were later brought into global media through The New York Times feature, Uncovering the Truths Behind the Tobacco Industry's Deception. GYV messages have also been amplified by the World Health Organization and the WHO FCTC Secretariat, including at COP10, where GYV became the first youth movement to address the Conference of the Parties. GYV is convened by the Global Center for Good Governance in Tobacco Control.*
